ABSTRACT

India is a developing country today Indian society is developing very fast Indian society has a very deep culture of norms, customs, values and traditions but there was also a time when women faced many social problems like veil system But with the passage of time, due to women education and women empowerment, it changed and women started to become equal to men, due to which an ideal society is being formed today.

Key Words: Women, Education, Changes

Introduction

India is a developing country India's social system is one of the oldest social systems In Indian society norms, customs, traditions are important factors for the society There was a time when women faced inequality Women faced many bullies And there was a lot of inequality between men and women in the society but it changed with the passage of time and due to education and women empowerment today women have become equal to men. To sustain the society it is necessary to develop the family and for the development of the family it is very important for women to get proper place in the family. It is necessary so that social development can take place properly.

Women Education in the Vedic Period

Primary education in the family was known in Vedic age in India when there were gurukul and ashram systems for higher education but at that time due to the lack of system of female education family education was limited to female education due to which female education could not develop and also due to lower age of marriage. There was an obstacle.

Women Education in Buddhist Times

During the Buddhist era, women were encouraged to get education, the centers of learning were Viharadhams and Mathas, where all people had equal right to get education, women also had the right to get education, so many monasteries and Viharas were also arranged to stay in them. Somewhere female education was also encouraged.

Women education during the British era

During the British era, after the freedom struggle against the British in 1857, there was a boost in education and female education, as well as in India's freedom struggle, Indian freedom fighters promoted women and female education, which was also useful for the freedom struggle. For that, he also did social work to get proper education.

Women's Education in Independence India

India has seen a rapid development in education as well as women education after independence. Indian government has organized various programs to promote girl education like "Beti Bachao Beti Padhao" The level of female education has been seen to increase after independence. The number of women's schools and colleges for education is also increasing.

Changes in women due to education

Education is the basic thing for development. Education also plays an important role in the development of women. Today, due to education, women have become equal to men. Women have also become financially capable to manage their own livelihood. And women are seen to be equal, the main reason behind all these changes is women's education.

Conclusion

Development of women in the society is very important because women make a family, a family makes a society and a society makes a nation. Today more than ever, due to the increase in female education, women get proper respect in the society, so education is for development and for women's development. There is a fundamental thing through which development is seen.
